dignified line and rich but carefully restrained color. His curtain-like backgrounds are especially winning. He uses symbolism, but does not force this too far. He does not strike us as being as sumptuous or as romantic as the Russians or as original as Jones. It is in the refined and charming character of his color schemes that he makes his most individualized appeal.

An exhibition sometimes makes odd bedfellows. At the Farnham gallery the walls are divided between George Bellows and the late Thomas Eakins, an interesting and not inharmonious pair, though the younger man seems a little crude and breathless after his sedate senior. Most of the canvases in both groups have been seen before. It is good to see some of them again, especially Eakins' lovely "Hunting Ground," his "Old Swimming Hole," and that charming portrait which he called "Clara." These things all wear well. Mr. Bellows maintains himself best in one or two of his smaller pieces, casual things, in which nature is not only seen but felt.

There are a few pleasing pieces of sculpture to be seen at the Whitney Studio Club, the best of them a lightly touched figure, full of grace and with a delicate personal quality, by Mr. Jerome Brush. Mr. Salvatore Bilotti shows admirable promise, particularly in his busts. Scattered through the rooms there are some capital textiles by Miss Lydia Bush-Brown, garments and decorative pieces of filmy material bearing unusually good designs.

Women's Smoking Habit
Reaches Rural England

First Concert in Which Cigarettes Appear Is Held in Small Town

LONDON, Feb. 14. The Daily News reports that a woman's smoking concert has been held at Gillingham, in Kent, the first time such an affair has been held in an English small town.

Of course, women can smoke practically everywhere now without attracting more than passing attention. Years ago only Paris women smoked, then London followed suit, and from London the habit spread to the provinces. Ten years ago one never saw a woman smoking in restaurants in towns outside London. Now everywhere in the provincial towns women light up their cigarettes when lunching in public as freely as they would do at home, although in two popular resorts in a large provincial city notices abound with the message, "Ladies are requested not to smoke."

Now smoking concerts, which originated in London with the Forum Club last year, have reached the country.

In the Parisian restaurants the majority of women diners smoke, and in Italy the habit has become just as popular. "I saw fashionable Italian ladies smoking in all the smart tea shops in Rome," said a woman who has just returned from Italy.

"Curiously enough, they prefer English Virginia cigarettes to the kind that are imported from Macedonia."

"English cigarettes are sold at the kiosks in the streets, and I have often heard Italian ladies ask for a packet of one of our cheap brands."

Loeser's
By Comparisons

COMPARISONS are healthy once in a while.

If carefully made they may disclose facts important as well as interesting.

If sane comparisons precede the spending of money they may well secure the saving of money.

So Loeser's invites sane and careful comparisons always.

For our own information—that we may be sure our service is as good as it ought to be—we are continually making such comparisons on our own account. There is no mere assumption of excellence here. We make SURE.

If you could see the results of these comparisons side by side—as we see them—we believe your confidence in Loeser's would become even greater than we have reason to believe it already is.

Take women's tailored wear as just one example.

You will not find all the good looks confined to Loeser's of course. But in the intelligent comparisons which this apparel deserves, you WILL find Loeser's tailored wear marked not alone by individuality and charm, but also by certain substantial excellences of workmanship that lift it above the usual.

It is not merely good. It is unquestionably best.

All through the Store you will find that Loeser's merchandise has the same distinction.

Prices are as low as anywhere—often lower. Variety of styles is as broad as anywhere—often broader. And QUALITY—the element that determines sound worth—gives to Loeser's merchandise a merit all its own.

Make comparisons. The information you will get is worth the trouble.

"SOME DAY" has arrived! How often have you said that some day, when you could afford it, you were going to have a Baby Grand Piano in your home? You have admired it every time you have seen it in other homes. You have been drawn to it by its beauty and lovely tone. You have noted the atmosphere of refinement it lends to its surroundings—and you have longed to add one of its kind to your possessions.

Now is surely your opportunity!

Here is a Baby Grand Piano that delights the eye and satisfies the most critical ear—an instrument that bears a name made famous by three generations of master builders of Pianos and today stands for all that is fine in an instrument of this character—offered at a price and on terms so easily met by homes of average means that every obstacle that could possibly stand in the way of its possession is at once swept away.

Two months ago such an extraordinarily low price would have been impossible and would be impossible today were it not for extraordinary circumstances. Since the first of the year the piano business in a great many sections of the United States has been unusually quiet, a condition which is prevalent in other lines of trade—and a great many piano manufacturers are overstocked. To meet the conditions a number of these piano manufacturers are closing down for a period of time, working half time, or else reducing production in some other manner.

The manufacturer of these instruments preferring to maintain full time with a full staff of workmen, decided to dispose of his overstock of instruments at a loss. Knowing of our facilities for disposing of the better class of instruments, the manufacturer came to us with a very attractive offer and we were not long in coming to an agreement.

So here they are! The greatest value in a Baby Grand Piano in the United States today—by a very great margin! Every one of them is a fine example of the high art of piano building. Every one of them made and finished with all the skill and care that identify the finest instruments made.

Settle on your plan of payment tonight. Come in tomorrow and present your plan to us, and if it is a fair business proposition it will be accepted by us at once. Select the instrument that appeals to your individual taste and it will be delivered without delay.
